WORKING PAPERS	“Automation Threat and Labor Market Power” This paper studies the role of automation threat in firms’ labor market power. Employing the production approach, I show that workers in an average German manufacturer receive 79 cents on the marginal euro. Using automation threat proxied by local labor market regions’ exposure to industrial robots instrumented by plausibly exogenous shift-share factors, I find that robot exposure increases employer power over routine workers in areas with weaker unions in East Germany with spatial frictions. The empirical findings are consistent with the wage bargaining model where employers retain the “right-to-manage” their workforce composition and unions representing different workers separately bargain with the firm.

“Alcohol Consumption and Intimate Partner Violence: Long-Term Effects of a Temporary Alcohol Ban” (with Arnab K. Basu and Nancy H. Chau), Under Review

We trace the impact of a temporary ban targeting liquor-serving bars – from launch to reversal – on alcohol consumption and women’s experience with domestic violence in Kerala, India. Decomposing the policy-induced and reversal effects by employing difference-in-differences and event-study approaches, we identify a significant reduction in alcohol consumption (but only in bars) with an accompanying reduction in intimate partner violence during the policy period. However, both alcohol consumption and domestic violence rebounded to pre-ban levels after the policy removal. Heterogeneity analysis further reveals these effects to be confined only amongst high-wealth households. A battery of robustness tests confirms our findings.

“Artisanal Mining and Intimate Partner Violence: Evidence from Sub-Saharan Africa” (with Anh Nguyen), Submitted

This paper studies the impact of artisanal mining on intimate partner violence in Sub-Saharan Africa. To identify the causal effects, we exploit spatial variation in gold suitability and industrial gold mining and exogenous temporal variation in global gold prices. Using individual-level data from 23 countries, we find that expansions in artisanal gold mining shift employment toward extraction and retail industries, with particularly strong increases in women’s employment in mining, and strengthen women’s intrahousehold bargaining power. These changes reduce moderately severe physical violence within the household, and the effects persist over time. The results suggest that improvements in women’s economic conditions and empowerment through artisanal gold mining reduce domestic violence, with the bargaining power channel dominating potential male backlash effects.

“Public Works Program, Labor Supply, and Monopsony” (with Nancy H. Chau and Vidhya Soundararajan)

This paper studies the role of changes in workforce composition in monopsony power. We develop a monopsony model in which a firm’s wage markdown—the wedge between MRPL and wage—is a weighted average of markdowns for heterogeneous workers. We empirically illustrate the theory using India’s National Rural Employment Guarantee Act (NREGA), which generates non-manufacturing jobs in rural areas. Consistent with the model predictions, at manufacturing firms, we find that the program increases average markdowns by crowding out mobile workers and effectively increasing the share of immobile workers with low labor supply elasticity.
